A brief reader's letter offering contributions to the medical humor section

Daniel Dutra dos Santos

Resident Physician in Obstetrics, Teresina-PI

Received for publication in December 2004 · Section: Open Forum · Language: English

ABSTRACT

This text is a short reader's letter addressed to the publication, in which the author congratulates the editorial initiative and offers his collaboration. He mentions having two classic episodes from his student days at the Federal University of Piauí that, in his view, would make good pieces for the medical humor section. The content of the stories is not reproduced in this excerpt; it is simply noted that the rest of the letter was published in that section. The writer closes by hoping his small contribution will be useful to the publications and by renewing his compliments. The message is signed with the author's details, a resident physician in obstetrics practicing in Teresina, Piauí. It is a brief, epistolary, and informal piece, with no scientific development.

KEYWORDS: reader's letter; medical humor; medical residency; obstetrics; editorial collaboration

I begin by congratulating you on this initiative and on such an excellent publication. I have two classic episodes from my student days at the Federal University of Piauí that would make great pieces for the medical humor section.

The remainder of the letter was published in the medical humor section.

A hug to all of you; I hope this small contribution proves useful to your publications.

Congratulations once again,

Daniel Dutra dos Santos
